

About the Authors

PABLO BERAMENDI is assistant professor of political science at Duke University.

CHRISTOPHER J. ANDERSON is professor of government, faculty affiliate of the Center for the Study of Inequality, and director of the Institute for European Studies at Cornell University.

ANDREA BRANDOLINI is head of the Economic Structure and Labour Market Division at the Department for Structural Economic Analysis at the Bank of Italy.

THOMAS R. CUSACK is a senior research fellow in the research unit on market processes and governance at the Science Center Berlin (WZB).

ROBERT J. FRANZESE JR. is associate professor of political science at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor.

JUDE C. HAYS is assistant professor of political science at the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign.

TORBEN IVERSEN is Harold Hitchings Burbank Professor of Political Economy in the Department of Government at Harvard University.

DUNCAN C. McRAE received a Ph.D. in political science from UCLA.

JONAS PONTUSSON is professor of politics at Princeton University.

PHILIPP REHM is a postdoctoral research fellow at Nuffield College, University of Oxford, and assistant professor of political science at Ohio State University.

RONALD ROGOWSKI is professor and former chair in the Department of Political Science at the University of California, Los Angeles.

DAVID RUEDA is professor of politics and fellow of Merton College at Oxford University.

LYLE SCRUGGS is associate professor of political science at the University of Connecticut.

TIMOTHY M. SMEEDING is Distinguished Professor of Economics and Public Administration at the Maxwell School of Syracuse University.

DAVID SOSKICE is research professor in the Department of Political Science at Duke University, research professor of comparative political economy at Oxford University, and senior research fellow at Nuffield College.