

Contributors

JOHN D. BACON is a graduate student in psychology at the University of Michigan.

*W. CURTIS BANKS received his Ph.D. in social psychology from Stanford University. Formerly on the faculty at Princeton University, he is senior research scientist and director of the Social Learning Laboratory, Educational Testing Service. In his present work Dr. Banks is examining incentive processes in child motivation as well as methods in Black psychology. He is the editor of the Journal of Black Psychology and serves on the editorial board for the American Journal of Orthopsychiatry. He was a member of the panel on special populations of the President's Commission on Mental Health.

*OSCAR BARBARIN received his Ph.D. in clinical psychology from Rutgers University. He is assistant professor of psychology and director of the Community Field Station, University of Maryland. Dr. Barbarin is most interested in family and community assessment, particularly in notions of effective functioning and support systems. He has been a participant in the American Psychological Association Visiting Psychologist Program. He currently serves on the review panel for the Psychological Sciences Fellowship Program of the National Institute of Mental Health.

*A. WADE BOYKIN received his Ph.D. in experimental psychology from the University of Michigan. He is an associate professor of psychology at Cornell University. His research and theoretical interests include the synergistic relationships between cultural-adaptive styles and problem-solving contexts and curiosity, intrinsic motivation, and cognitive functioning. During the 1978-79 academic year he was a fellow at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences, Stanford, California. Dr. Boykin was recently named a Spencer Fellow, National Academy of Education. He is currently associate editor of the Journal of Black Psychology.

MICHAEL COLE is coordinator for Program in Communications, University of California at San Diego.

*O. JACKSON COLE received his Ph.D. in personality psychology from the University of Michigan. A former faculty member at the City University of New York, he is associate dean of the School of Human Ecology, Howard University. His area of specialization is personality theory and assessment. He is one of the two principal investigators on a longitudinal project funded by the Office of Child Development, which seeks to determine the impact of preschool on the development of Black inner-city youths. He was on the Special Populations Panel of the President's Commission on Mental Health.

* An actual participant in the research conferences out of which this book grew.

Contributors

WILLIAM COLLINS is currently associate director of the Minority Educational Affairs Program at Cornell University.

*WILLIAM E. CROSS, JR., received his Ph.D. in social-personality psychology from Princeton University. He is an assistant professor at the Africana Studies and Research Center, as well as a member of the graduate field of Human Development and Family Studies, Cornell University. Professor Cross recently received a grant from the Administration for Children, Youth, and Families (DHEW) to conduct a longitudinal study of (1) formal and informal family support systems in the Black community, and (2) the development of identity of Black and White children during preschool to early school years. He was co-organizer of the third and fourth conferences on Empirical Research in Black Psychology.

*HERMAN W. DORSETT received his Ed.D. from Columbia University. He is an associate professor in the School of Business and Organizational Sciences (Division of Management) at Florida International University. His research and applied interests include organizational renewal and development, group and social processes, human interaction training, and organizational design. He is an adjunct fellow of the NTL (National Training Laboratory) Institute of Applied Behavioral Science. He is also editor of the quarterly Social Change.

OZZIE L. EDWARDS is currently director of the Center for Urban Studies of the Graduate School of Education at Harvard University.

*ANDERSON J. FRANKLIN received his Ph.D. in counseling psychology from the University of Oregon. He is an associate professor in the department of psychology clinical doctoral program at the City College and Graduate Center of the City University of New York. His research and theoretical interests center on adolescent cognitive and social development and on ethnographic issues of mental health. Dr. Franklin is a licensed psychologist in the state of New York. He is also a member of the National Register of Health Service Providers in Psychology and of the review board for the National Institute of Mental Health Small Grants Program. He is a past president of the New York Association of Black Psychologists.

LENORA FULANI is a graduate student in psychology at the City University of New York.

*WILLIAM S. HALL received his Ph.D. in clinical psychology from the University of Chicago. Formerly director of the Institute for Comparative Human Development, Rockefeller University, he is professor of psychology and education and associate director of the Center for the Study of Reading at the University of Illinois, Champaign-Urbana. Dr. Hall's research interests center on cultural, social, and situational factors in language usage and production. He is co-author of Culture and Language (New York: Halsted Press, 1975).

He is chairman of the program committee for the 1981 biennial convention of the Society for Research in Child Development. He was co-organizer of the fourth Conference on Empirical Research in Black Psychology. He has recently completed a book on adolescent psychology.

*ALGEA O. HARRISON received her Ph.D. in the joint education and psychology program at the University of Michigan. She is an associate professor of psychology at Oakland University in Rochester, Michigan. Dr. Harrison's principal interests center on inter-role conflicts and coping strategies among Black women. She is also conducting an analysis of Afro-American folk tales and their implications for child reading practices. Dr. Harrison was co-organizer of the third Conference on Empirical Research in Black Psychology. She is also chairwoman of the Committee for Minority Participation, Society for Research in Child Development.

JANET L. HUBBARD is a graduate student in psychology at the University of California at Los Angeles.

*JAMES S. JACKSON received his Ph.D. in social psychology from Wayne State University. He is an associate professor of psychology as well as an associate of the Institute for Social Research, at the University of Michigan. Dr. Jackson's current interests center on survey research methodology. He is principal investigator of the National Survey on Black Mental Health, a project funded by the National Institute of Mental Health. He is a member of the psychology education review committee of the NIMH. He is also chairman of the Association for the Advancement of Psychology and a past president of the National Association of Black Psychologists.

RONALD M. JENNINGS is a psychologist in the United States Air Force.

*JAMES M. JONES received his Ph.D. in social psychology from Yale University. Formerly on the faculty at Harvard University, he is currently director of the Minority Fellowships Program, American Psychological Association. Dr. Jones's research interests center on race and culture and how they affect the psychology of humor and the psychology of sports. He is a former recipient of a Guggenheim fellowship and the author of Prejudice and Racism (Reading, Mass.: Addison-Wesley, 1972).

YVONNE B. KELLEY is a graduate student in psychology at Howard University.

*WILLIAM LAWSON received his Ph.D. in physiological psychology from the University of New Hampshire and his M.D. from the University of Chicago, Pritzker School of Medicine. He has served on the faculty in the department of psychology at the University of Illinois, Champaign-Urbana. He is in residence in psychiatry at Stanford University. Dr. Lawson's research interests include community psychiatry, and taste and behavior. He is the former mid-west regional representative of the National Association of Black Psychologists. While at the University of Chicago he was chairman of the Martin Luther King

Contributors

Scholarship Committee and president of the local chapter of the Student National Medical Association.

GREGORY V. MCQUATER is a graduate student in psychology at Princeton University.

LILLIAN PATTERSON is a graduate student in psychology at the University of Michigan.

JOHN PETERSON is an assistant professor of psychology, Claremont Men's College, Claremont, California.

*DIANE S. POLLARD received her Ph.D. in educational psychology from the University of Chicago. She is an associate professor of educational psychology at the University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee. Her research interests include the development of coping mechanisms among Blacks, socialization processes in Black families, and socialization from one institution to another. Dr. Pollard is the former secretary of the National Association of Black Psychologists. She is on the editorial board for the Journal of Black Psychology.

STEPHEN REDER is on the staff at the Northwest Laboratory for Educational Development, Portland, Oregon.

*JAMES E. SAVAGE, JR., received his Ph.D. in educational research and clinical psychology from Northwestern University. He is currently an associate professor of psychology at George Mason University and lecturer in the department of psychology at Howard University. Dr. Savage's research interests revolve around family mental health and child socialization. He has received a grant from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to study parent absence and child socialization. He also has a project funded by the Department of Transportation to study transportation and the mental health of the family. He is on the licensing board in psychology for the District of Columbia.

*SANDRA A. SIMS received her Ph.D. in social psychology from the University of Michigan. She is an assistant professor of psychology at Boston College. During the 1978-79 academic year she was on leave from her teaching position in order to pursue clinical training at the Judge Baker Guidance Center in Boston. Dr. Sims is book review editor for the Journal of Black Psychology.

ANITA D. STEARNS is a graduate student in psychology at Howard University.

*EWART A. C. THOMAS received his Ph.D. in statistics from Cambridge University, England. He is a professor of psychology at Stanford University. Dr. Thomas concentrates his theoretical and empirical studies on individual and small group behavior. During the 1976-77 academic year he was on a Guggenheim Fellowship. Dr. Thomas comes from Guyana, South America.

M. BELINDA TUCKER is a research psychologist, Center for Afro-American Studies, University of California at Los Angeles.

JANET WILLIAMS is a graduate student in psychology at Howard University.

*CARL O. WORD received his Ph.D. in social psychology from Princeton University. Formerly on the faculty at Baruch College in New York City, Dr. Word is now doing private consulting in San Francisco. His current interests include Blacks and the media, and Black sexuality. He is co-chairman of the Bay Area Association of Black Psychologists.

*J. FRANK YATES received his Ph.D. in mathematical psychology from the University of Michigan. He is an associate professor of psychology at the University of Michigan. Dr. Yates has two major research interests: decision making involving multiattribute alternatives, and effort and attention control in academic performance. He is a former chairman of the National Science Foundation's Predoctoral Fellowship Program review committee for psychology. He serves on the review board for the Small Grants Program of the National Institute of Mental Health. Dr. Yates is a member of the American Institute for Decision Sciences. Recently he was given the Distinguished Service Award, at the University of Michigan.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The authors gratefully acknowledge permission to reprint material from the following: Table 22.1 reprinted with permission of author and publisher from M. Guttentag, "Negro-White Differences in Children's Movement," Perceptual and Motor Skills, 1972, 35, Table 2, page 436; W. S. Hall, S. Reder, and O. J. Cole, "Story Recall in Young Black and White Children," Developmental Psychology (1975) 11 (5): 628-34 (Copyright © 1975 by the American Psychological Association, reprinted with permission); W. C. Banks, G. V. McQuater, and J. L. Hubbard, eds., "Toward a Reconceptualization of the Social-Cognitive Bases of Achievement Orientations in Blacks," Review of Educational Research (Fall 1978), pp. 381-97 (Copyright © 1978 by the American Educational Research Association, Washington, D.C.); Edmund C. Short, "Knowledge Production and Utilization in Curriculum: A Special Case of the General Phenomenon," Review of Educational Research (Summer 1979), pp. 237-301 (Copyright © 1979 by the American Educational Research Association, Washington, D.C.); A. Wade Boykin, "Psychological/Behavioral Verve," adapted from an article in the Journal of Negro Education (1978) 47:343-54; A. Wade Boykin, "Black Psychology and the Research Process," Journal of Black Psychology (1977) 4:43-64; J. S. Jackson, J. D. Bacon, and J. Peterson, "Correlates of Adjustment in Urban Black Aged," which originally appeared in W. Smith, A. Burlew, M. Moseley, and W. Whitney, eds., Reflections on Black Psychology (Washington, D.C.: University Press of America, 1979).