Index

Boldface numbers refer to figures and tables.

ACA. See Affordable Care Act (ACA) of 2010

adults/adulthood: accelerated/expedited, 9; key markers of, 32; multiple pathways to, 32; transition to (see transition to adulthood); young people's subjective understanding of, 7–8, 32

Affordable Care Act (ACA) of 2010, 237, 241

African American men. See race

Agan, Amanda, 212

age, stable employment and, 144, 150

Alegria, Margarita, 110

Alexander, Karl L., 11, 212, 223

Allen, Charlotte, 162

Apel, Robert, 134, 248/106

Arnett, Jeffrey, 7

Arrestee Drug Abuse Monitoring (ADAM) program, 236

Ashford University, 84, 101

Astone, Nan Marie, 28

Azrael, Deborah, 238

Baker College of Flint, 84, 87

Becker, Gary, 254/46

Beginning Postsecondary Students Longitudinal Study (BPS-2004), 80, 82, 257/31

black men. See race

Bonikowski, Bart, 212

Braman, Donald, 239

Breen, Richard, 91–92

Cameron, Stephen, 56

Chin, Tiffani, 62

chronic strains, 115

Chung, He Len, 229

Clampet-Lundquist, Susan, 9

Comfort, Megan, 44

contexts: neighborhoods (see neighborhood contexts); school (see school contexts). See also human capital continuing education trajectory group: characteristics and examples of, 184–90; composition of, 205–6

Cook, Benjamin, 110

Crifasi, Cassandra, 238

criminal justice system: consequences of imprisonment beyond the period of confinement, 14–16; educational outcomes and, 63; expansion of and mass incarceration, 12–16; findings regarding, 222; GED and, 55, 73; high school completion/GED before prison and, 65, 67, 69, 73; large-scale reforms to, policy implications of, 242–43; in Michigan, 49; police aggression and violence, policy implications of reducing, 238–39; postsecondary education and, 90–91; race and mass incarceration, 13–14; reintegration outcomes and, 43–45; risky health behaviors and, 105–7, 121–22 (see also risky health behaviors); stable employment and, 145–46, 149–50; transition to adulthood and, 225–27

data for Harding-Harris study: from the Beginning Postsecondary Students Longitudinal Study (BPS-2004), 80, 82, 257n31; collection process for, 216; features of, 46–47; features of the sample, 48; of GED attainment, 54; longitudinal administrative data, comparative advantage of, 46; longitudinal administrative data, trade-offs of, 47–48; from the Michigan unemployment insurance office, 134, 151; from the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES), 7; from the National Death Index (NDI), 260n11; from the National Student Clearinghouse (NSC), 76–77, 80, 82, 87, 97, 256n18, 256n27; sources of, 47, 216; on substance abuse and violence, limitations of, 106–7

Davenport University, 84
Deess, Perry, 162
DeLuca, Stefanie, 9
disconnected/disconnection: definition of, 51; early school noncompletion and the risk for becoming, 53; example of, 51–53, 72; findings regarding, 227–28; GED attainment and, 54–55; race and, 60–61; young adults and, 5–6, 10 disconnected trajectory group: characteristics and examples of, 198–202; composition of, 207; race and membership in, 211–12 drugs/drug abuse. See substance use and abuse

Earls, Felton, 164 earnings: effects of GED on, 56; post-prison enrollment in postsecondary education and, 94, 96, 100, 102–3; proportion of employed men with earnings above the poverty line after release, race and, 138

Edin, Kathryn, 9 education: criminal justice system and level of, 63; educational momentum/interruption, 90–91, 94, 102; high school diploma before prison and, 57, 58, 65, 67; high school diploma before prison vs. no diploma or GED before prison, 66; improving, policy implications of, 230–34; level of at time of prison release, 78; level of by prison inmates, 53; pre-prison employment and, 63–64; reintegration outcomes and, 42–43; risky health behaviors and, 118–19, 123, 125–26, 130–31; school-then-work sequence, inversion of, 228, 233; setbacks during the transition to adulthood, impact of, 51; stable employment and, 144–45, 149 education (GED), 55–56; benefits of, 56; benefits of for prison inmates, 56–57, 72; earned before prison, 67, 69; earned before prison compared to no GED or high school diploma before prison, 68; earned during prison, implications for, 226, 233; earned during prison compared to earned before prison, 69, 70; earned during prison compared to never earned, 70–72, 71; factors associated with earning, 56; family relationships and, 64; human capital and, 54, 60–61, 67; institutional settings and, 55, 63, 67, 69; methodology and procedures used in research of, 54; neighborhood/school contexts and, 55, 61–63; offered and earned in correctional institutions, 53; probability of earning during the focal prison sentence, by race and time, 59; race and, 54–55, 57, 58, 60–61; repeated attempts to pass exams, 57, 59; social bonds and, 67, 69; education (postsecondary enrollment), 76–77; barriers to, 101, 103; beginning, persisting, and ending, by quarter, 2003–2014, 78, 79, 80; benefits of, 74; benefits of for formerly incarcerated men, 74–75; college degree completion rates contrasted with increasing enrollments, 74; college enrollment, increases in, 74; earnings and likelihood of, 94, 96; educational interruption and criminal justice experiences, 90–91; educational interruption and likelihood of postsecondary enrollment, 94, 102; elongation of the transition to adulthood and, 7; enroll in, predictors of who will, 93–94, 95, 96, 102–3; enrollment after multiple incarcerations, examples of, 75–76; enrollment at private and for-profit colleges, 2002–2014, 86; enrollment duration by sector and status, 2002–2014, 85; enrollment timing, predictors of, 97, 98–99, 100–101; financial benefits and burdens from, 82, 84, 92, 101–2; in for-profit postsecondary institutions, 80–82, 84, 86, 87, 101, 257n32; increasing, 7; institutions and degree attainment, 82, 84; living arrangements and, 92–93, 96, 100; race and, 87–90, 88–89, 94–97, 95, 96, 98–99, 103; relative risk aversion theory applied to, 91–94, 96, 100, 102–3; sector and status of enrollments, 80–82, 81; timing of enrollments by sector and status, 2002–2014, 83; types and timing of, 77–78, 80; employment of formerly incarcerated young adults, stable: advantages and unattainability of, 132–33, 150; age and, 144, 150; criminal justice contact and, 145–46, 149–50; definition of “stable employment,” 135; determinants of, 143–47; disadvantages faced by the formerly incarcerated, 152; education and, 144–45, 149; example of struggles with, 133–34; health and, 145, 150; human capital and, 144–45, 148–49; industries in which formerly incarcerated men find stable employment, 142, 142–43; limitations of analysis and data, 151; neighborhood disadvantage and, pre-prison, 145, 150; predicting, 147–51; predictors of achieving stable employment after release, race and, 148; pre-prison employment and, 149; proportion of employed men with earnings above the poverty line after release, race and, 137–38, 138; proportion of men employed in previous quarter who remained employed in subsequent quarter after release, race and, 140, 140–41; proportion of men employed over twenty-four calendar quarters after release, race and, 137; proportion of men ever employed after release, race and, 139, 139–40; proportion of men who reach stable employment after release, race and, 141, 141–42; public policy considerations regarding, 152, 234–35; race and, 135–36, 143–44, 147–48, 150; rarity of, 134, 150; social context and, 146–47; substance abuse and, 126, 145, 149; trends in post-release outcomes, race and, 136–43

Entwisle, Doris R., 11, 212, 223

family relationships: importance of, 64; as key concept for reintegration outcomes, 38–39; living arrangements as social support, 92–93, 96, 221; parenthood as marker for the transition to adulthood, 249n25; parent qualities and residential stability/instability, 267n14; residential stability/instability and, 162, 167

Farley, Reynolds, 50

findings of Harding-Harris study: documenting post-prison experiences, 219; multiple compounding disadvantages early in life, 218; policy implications of (see policy implications of Harding-Harris study); race and the transition to adulthood, 222–24; roles of social support, social contexts, and institutions, 220–22; trajectories of successful transitions to adulthood after prison, 219–20; transition to adulthood, implications for, 225–29

Freeman, Richard, 147

fundamental cause theory, 112, 114

Furstenberg, Frank, 225

GBMTM. See group-based multi-trajectory models

GED (general educational development) certificate. See education (GED)

Goldthorpe, John, 91–92

Grattet, Ryken, 119

group-based multi-trajectory models (GBMTM), 176–77, 179

Harding, David, 151

Harding-Harris study: data for (see data for Harding-Harris study); findings of (see findings of Harding-Harris study); goal of, 45–46; Michigan as geographical focus of, 49–50; policy implications of (see policy implications of Harding-Harris study); statistical techniques employed in, 48–49 health: disadvantaged neighborhoods and, 112–13; education and, 118–19; fundamental causes and, 112; incarceration and, 115–16; poverty and, 112; risky behaviors related to (see risky health behaviors); stigma and, 14, 112
Heckman, James, 56
Hogan, Dennis, 28
Holzer, Harry, 231
homes/households: housing stability, policy implications of improving, 239–40; as key concept for reintegration outcomes, 38–39; in Michigan, race and, 50. See also family relationships; residential stability/stability/instability human capital: development of, 60; early school noncompletion and, 53; the GED as, 56; GED attainment and, 54; GED attainment before prison and, 67; race and development of, 60–61; stable employment and, 144–45, 148–49 income. See earnings inequality: early life events and, 28; race and (see race) informal control mechanisms. See social bonds institutions: criminal justice system (see criminal justice system); educational (see education); findings regarding, 222; GED before prison and, 67, 69; inequality of treatment by, 28–29; parole (see parole supervision); reintegration outcomes and, 37, 42–45 intermittency of involvement in crime, 193–94
ITT Technical Institute, 84, 87, 101
John, Andrea, 129
Klein, Daniel, 266n48 Kling, Jeffrey, 56
labeling theory, 63
labor market. See employment
Laub, John, 27, 29
LeBel, Thomas, 117
life-course theory: age, importance of, 144; desistance from crime and, 29; as a framework, transition to adulthood and, 27–30; post-prison outcomes modeled using group-based multi-trajectory models, 177 (see also trajectory groups, post-prison); residential stability and, 166, 172–74; trajectories and, 28, 37, 175–76, 217, 229 (see also trajectories); transitions and, 28, 217 (see also transition to adulthood)
Lin, Jeffrey, 119
Link, Bruce, 112
Little, Michelle, 229
Lynch, James, 164
marriage: educational attainment and, 67, 72; as marker for the transition to adulthood, 249n25
Maruna, Shadd, 29
Massoglia, Michael, 116
MDOC. See Michigan Department of Corrections methodology: average marginal effect (AME) estimates, 263–64n109; discrete time-event history models, 48–49, 100; domain-specific outcome measures for modeling post-release trajectory groups, 177–78; educational interruption, measurement of, 93; event history analysis, 259n58; group-based disadvantaged, residential instability and, 164–65; disadvantaged, risky health behaviors and, 112–15, 126, 128, 129; disadvantaged, stable employment and, 145, 150; findings regarding, 221–22; GED attainment and, 55, 61; high school completion and, 65; as key concept for reintegration outcomes, 39–40, 41; moving to a new nonprivate residence, probability of by individual and neighborhood characteristics and race, 169; moving to a new private residence, probability of by individual and neighborhood characteristics and race, 168; race and, 113–14; residential instability and, 158, 160, 164–65, 171–72, 173; stable employment and, 146–47; unemployment in the neighborhood, stable employment and, 147

Nelson, Marta, 162

Olson, Linda S., 11, 212, 223

Owens, Ann, 61

Pager, Devah, 212

parole supervision: custodial sanctions and residential mobility, 163–64, 167, 171, 173; levels and regimes of, 119–20; race and, 120, 126; reintegration outcomes and, 44–45; risky health behaviors and, 119–20; substance abuse and, 126; a supportive rather than punitive institution, policy implications of, 241–42 persisting (in crime) trajectory group: characteristics and examples of, 190–93; composition of, 206; race and membership in, 209

Petersilia, Joan, 119
Index 329

Pettit, Becky, 14
Pew Research Center, 82
Phelan, Jo, 112
Phillips, Meredith, 62
Phoenix, University of, 84, 101
policy implications of Harding-Harris study, 229–30; criminal justice system, large-scale reforms to, 242–43; developmentally informed policy approach, need for, 243; educational institutions, improving, 230–34; gun violence, reducing, 237–38; housing stability, improving, 239–40; labor market (employment), improving, 152, 234–35; parole as a supportive rather than punitive institution, 241–42; police aggression and violence, reducing, 238–39; social support during incarceration, fostering greater, 240; substance abuse detection and treatment, 236–37; transition from prison to community, easing the, 240–41
Pollack, Harold, 123 poverty: gun violence and, 238; poor health and, 112; post-release employed men, the poverty line and, 137–38, 138; race and, 113–14; violence and, 113 prison: the GED and, 55 (see also education (GED)); reintegration outcomes and, 43–45; security levels in, 71–72; time in and earning the GED, 69, 71, 73 prison-based education: focus of, 53; requirement to pursue GED, 56, 63. See also education (GED) prison incarceration: as both chronic strain and primary stressor, 115; health, as a context for, 115–16; race and, 222–23 (see also criminal justice system); stigma associated with, 116 (see also stigma) prison inmates: early post-release experiences of, 30; educational trajectories of, research focus on, 54; level of educational attainment by, 53 probation, 251n81
race: background characteristics and pre- and post-prison experiences by, 32, 33–35, 36–37; causes of mortality and, 105, 107–8; criminal justice system/mass incarceration and, 13–14; disconnection and, 5, 60–61; disproportionate imprisonment of blacks, impacts of, 165; education, returns on, 130–31; education and health, social mobility and the relationship between, 119; education level at time of prison release and, 78; employment and, 212, 223–24, 235 (see also employment of formerly incarcerated young adults, stable); findings regarding, 222–24; GED attainment and, 54–55, 57, 58, 72; GED attainment before prison and, 67; GED earned in prison compared to never earned and, 71; gun violence and, 238; high school graduation before prison and, 57, 58; imprisonment and, 37, 222–23; Michigan, racial inequality in, 50; neighborhood disadvantage and, 39–40, 41, 113–14, 126, 128, 128–29, 223; parole supervision and, 120, 126; post-prison risky health behaviors and, 110–11, 111, 120–23, 124, 125–26, 127, 130–31; post-prison trajectory group membership and, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211–12; postsecondary enrollments and,
Index

87–90, 88–89, 92, 94, 95, 96, 103; poverty and, 113–14; pre-prison patterns of violence and substance abuse, 108–9, 109; probability of earning GED during the focal prison sentence, 59; processes of selection into prison and, 209, 211; repeated attempts to pass GED exams based on, 59; residential independence and, 130; residential stability/instability (see residential stability/instability); social contexts and, 223; steeper hurdles faced by formerly incarcerated young black men, 6; substance abuse testing and, 236; timing of enrollment in postsecondary educational institutions and, 97, 98–99, 100–101; the transition to adulthood and, 10–11, 17, 214–15, 222–24, 228–29
Raphael, Steven, 248n106 rational choice theory, 63
Raudenbush, Stephen, 164
Reardon, Sean, 61
relative risk aversion theory, 91–94, 96, 100, 102–3 residential independence: achievement of, 220; definition of, 130, 177–78 residential stability/instability: attaining residential stability, probability of by individual and neighborhood characteristics and race, 170; average characteristics of neighborhoods over the observation period, by race, 161; conclusions regarding, 172–74; custodial/parole sanctions and, 163–64, 167, 171, 173; definition of residential stability, 269n46; example of experiencing instability, 153–54; experience of nonprivate residences and criminal justice facilities after release, race and, 157; housing stability, policy implications of improving, 239–40; instability, possible explanations for, 161–65; instability among formerly incarcerated men, race and, 155–61; instability and types of residences, race and, 155–58; life transition events and, 166, 172–74; living arrangements, race and, 158; living arrangements at the first residence after release, race and, 159; moving to a new nonprivate residence, probability of by individual and neighborhood characteristics and race, 169; moving to a new private residence, probability of by individual and neighborhood characteristics and race, 168; neighborhood context and, 164–65, 171–72, 173; neighborhoods, race and, 158, 160; number of residential moves over the observation period, by race, 156; predictors of stability, 166–67, 168–70, 171–72; proportion of moves in the community by month after release, race and, 157; race and, 165; return to pre-prison addresses and neighborhoods at release, race and, 160; significance of for formerly incarcerated men, 153; social support and, 162–63, 167, 173, 220–21; transition to adulthood and, 172, 174
Rick, Armin, 5
risky health behaviors: criminal justice system involvement and, 106; education and, 118–19, 123, 130–31; employment and, 119, 131; “health behaviors” defined, 106; incarceration and, 115–16; mortality as most serious negative consequence of, 105 (see also mortality); neighborhood disadvantage and, 112–13, 126, 128–29; parole supervision and, 119–20; patterns and examples of, 104–7, 129–31; post-prison involvement in, determinants of, 121–23, 124, 125–26, 127–28; post-prison patterns of, 110–11, 111, 115–16; pre-prison patterns of, 108–9, 109; race and post-prison, 120–23, 124, 125–26; social support and, 118; stigma from incarceration and, 117–18, 129–30; transition to adulthood and, 105, 111–12, 131. See also substance use and abuse; violence Rodgers, William, 147 Royster, Deirdre, 212 Rumbaut, Rubén, 225 Sabol, William, 164 Sampson, Robert, 27, 29, 114, 164 Schnittker, Jason, 17, 114, 129 school contexts: GED attainment and, 55, 62–63; GED attainment in prison or before prison and, 69, 73; school/teacher quality, race and, 62–63 Schulenberg, John, 38 Seim, Josh, 151 self-concept, changes in, 29 self-efficacy, definition of, 261n59 Settersten, Richard, 10, 225 Sharkey, Patrick, 238 Silva, Jennifer, 9 Smith, Sandra, 212 social bonds: GED completion before prison and, 69, 72; high school completion before prison and, 67, 72; role in the transition to adulthood, 64; as social supports, the life-course framework and, 28–29. See also marriage social capital, neighborhood SES and, 61 social contexts: findings regarding, 221–22; the life-course framework and, 28–29; neighborhoods (see neighborhood contexts); post-prison risky health behaviors and, 107; race and, 223; reintegration outcomes and, 37; stable employment and, 146–47 social control, informal, 29 social control theory, 63 social supports: findings regarding, 220–21; during incarceration, policy implications of fostering greater, 240; living arrangements as, 92–93, 96, 146, 269–70n47; networks in the labor market, racial inequality and, 212; primary measures of, 272n9; reintegration outcomes and, 37–39; residential stability/instability and, 162–63, 167, 173, 220–21; stigmatization, as offset to, 118. See also family relationships; human capital special alternative to incarceration (SAI), 3 Starr, Sonja, 212 Steinberg, Laurence, 229 stigma: criminal record as a structural, 14, 43; definition of, 116; employment and, 212, 234; health outcomes and, 14, 112; incarceration and, 29, 72, 81, 92, 116, 129–30; multiple forms of experienced by formerly incarcerated men, 117; social support as offset to, 118; during the transition to adulthood, 117–18, 130 substance use and abuse: detection and treatment, policy implications of, 236–37; determinants of post-prison, race and, 123, 125–26, 127; education and, 125–26; employment and, 126, 145, 149; examples and patterns of, 104–7; limitations of data on, 106–7; mortality from, racial divide regarding, 105, 107–8; neighborhood disadvantage and, 114–15; parole supervision and, 119–20, 126; post-prison patterns of, race and, 110–11, 111; pre-prison patterns of, race and, 108–9, 109; treatment for, 110, 236–37; violence and, 122–23, 125. See also risky health behaviors
Index

Sugie, Naomi, 134
Sweeten, Gary, 134, 248n106

technical rule violations/violators (TRVs): cycling in and out of, example of, 105; parole violation and, 45, 52; substance abuse and, example of, 75 trajectories: defined, 28, 217; domain-specific outcome measures, 177–78; group-based multi-trajectory models to examine, 176–77 (see also trajectory groups, post-prison); life and domain-specific, research questions and, 175–76

trajectory groups, post-prison: characteristics of, 203–4; composition of, 202, 205–7; conclusions regarding, 213–15; continuing education group, characteristics and examples of, 184–90; continuing education group, composition of, 205–6; disconnected group, characteristics and examples of, 198–202; disconnected group, composition of, 207; key predictors of, 178–79, 214; linkage of, observations regarding, 202; persisting (in crime) group, characteristics and examples of, 190–93; persisting (in crime) group, composition of, 206; post-prison, modeling of, 177–79, 180–81; racial differences in group membership, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211–12, 214–15; transitioning group, characteristics and examples of, 182–84; transitioning group, composition of, 202, 205; unsettled group, characteristics and examples of, 193–98; unsettled group, composition of, 206 transitioning trajectory group: characteristics and examples of, 182–84; composition of, 202, 205; race and membership in, 209, 211–12 transitions: to adulthood (see transition to adulthood); defined, 28, 175, 217; positive (“turning points”), 29; from prison to community, policy implications of easing, 240–41 transition to adulthood: after prison, 16–18, 25; background characteristics and pre- and post-prison experiences by race, 32, 33–35, 36–37; basis for successful, 118; challenges faced by formerly imprisoned young adults, 27–28, 214; conceptualizing, 30, 31, 32, 36–37; elongation of, 7; findings from study of (see findings of Harding-Harris study); immediate post-prison experience as critical for, 6; implications of findings for, 225–29; imprisonment during, repercussions and examples of, 1–6, 217–18, 248n106; key markers of, 32; life-course framework and, 27–30 (see also life-course theory); marriage and parenthood as markers of, 249n25; methodological shortcomings in the examination of, 176–77; misalignment between expectations and experiences violence: crimes considered violent, 259n4; determinants of post-prison, race and, 121–23, 124; disadvantaged neighborhoods and, 113–14; education and, 123; employment and, 123; examples and patterns of, 104–7; during incarceration, 115–16; limitations of data on, 106; mortality from, racial divide regarding, 105, 107–8; police, policy implications of reducing, 238–39; post-prison patterns of, race and, 110–11, 111; poverty and, 113; pre-prison patterns of, race and, 108, 109; reducing gun, policy implications of, 237–38; substance use and, 122–23; violence as propagating, 122. See also risky health behaviors

Wacquant, Loïc, 12–13
wages. See earnings
Wald, Michael, 230
Waters, Mary, 8
Western, Bruce, 14, 113–14, 134, 212, 238, 242
Willet, John, 56
Wilson, William Julius, 114