PREFATORY NOTE

This pamphlet is a revision of a former one, entitled "Public Lectures in School Buildings" (No. 52). The original publication was issued in August, 1910, and was composed of three parts: (1) a descriptive account of typical school lecture systems with suggestions as to their development, (2) an inventory of local lecture sources, and (3) a directory of those national organizations which use the lecture platform, together with lists of their respective topics. Parts 1 and 2 were subsequently incorporated in the volume "Wider Use of the School Plant" and thus became permanently accessible on library shelves. Part 3, however, being made up largely of names and addresses which were subject to frequent change, was omitted from the book, and when the supply of pamphlet No. 52 was exhausted this information became unavailable. This directory had proved so useful to the large number of local associations which organize public meetings and thus create public sentiment in favor of needed reforms that it was decided to revise it and bring it up to date. In its second edition, it is accompanied by the list of local lecture sources and an extract from the original Part 1 giving some general suggestions upon the organization of public forums in school buildings.

In publishing this directory the Foundation assumes no responsibility as to the merits of the organizations or their speakers. In its preparation we invited as large a list of associations devoted to social welfare as we could compile. All those which accepted our offer have been entered without discrimination.

Sources of Speakers and Topics *

There are many welfare organizations † which either employ, or include in their membership, persons who may be secured to give addresses upon public questions. In this way associations find an opportunity to publish the results of their investigations, awaken public sentiment and propagate the ideas for which they stand. Through correspondence with these organizations speakers of national reputation can frequently be obtained at the cost of their traveling expenses only.

The National Child Labor Committee frequently utilizes the public school platform to present various phases of its work. It has a staff of lecturers who regularly respond to invitations, without charge to affiliated organizations and for a reasonable honorarium in the case of outside societies. The School of Philanthropy of New York has an extension service, and arranges with members of its staff for single lectures or courses of lectures upon social, philanthropic and charitable topics. One important course it gives is upon "The Care of Children." The usual charge for this service is $20 and traveling expenses for each lecture.

The United States Department of Agriculture also furnishes speakers on certain occasions. Concerning this work the Secretary of Agriculture has written: "The Department maintains in its Office of Experiment Stations an Agricultural Education Service in which the time of several specialists is devoted to the study of educational problems, particularly those concerned with the introduction of instruction in nature study, school gardening, and elementary agriculture into the public schools, and this service, as well as some of the other Bureaus of the Department, frequently furnishes speakers at large educational gatherings where leading educators are assembled and there is likely to be opportunity to exert a wide influence on educational policy."

In most states there are certain institutions and organizations from which speakers may be secured. Such are the experimental stations attached to the agricultural colleges, the state department of public instruction, the home economics department of the state university and the similar departments of agricultural colleges, and the various state conferences of charity.

The success of an application for a lecturer depends largely upon the importance of the occasion and the opportunity it offers for promoting the interests of his organization. To invest the occasion with the proper "importance" the enterprising director will enlist the assistance of the local organization that is identified with the same cause as the speaker. If he is baiting his hook for a celebrated champion of the playground movement, he will get the local playground association to extend the invitation and afterwards induce the members to act as patrons of the meeting. The association will then help with the audience. The people will hear a distinguished speaker, the playground movement will be advanced, and the school lecture work will score a success.

In applying to outside organizations for speakers it is important to give full information in regard to the size and character of the audience expected, hours and dates preferred, general topics and type of lecture (technical, popular, or illustrated) desired and the maximum expense which may be incurred. When the lecturers are not paid a fee the chief reliance will have to be placed usually upon those people who have interesting subjects to talk about even though they are not finished speakers. In every community there is a large class of such persons from whom addresses, at once profitable and enjoyable, can be obtained without charge. The local historical society often has some member who can talk entertainingly on the early history of the community. Almost every town has a natural history society among the members of which there is some geologist who can describe, and frequently illustrate with lantern slides, the formations of the earth's crust in that locality. Social settlement workers may be found who will give addresses upon pertinent local social problems. Often the public librarian will be glad to avail himself of the schoolhouse platform to tell the community about the resources of his library. Many medical associations contain public-spirited members upon whom the community can draw for instructive addresses on such topics as the ways in which the city's health can be conserved.

A list of organizations, or classes of persons from whom lectures can be frequently obtained without cost, together with suggestions as to topics and titles, will be found on page 26 under the title "Local Sources."

Whether the lecturers are employed or give their services, whether they come from a distance or are selected from the community, a school lecture system will fail of its highest usefulness unless it satisfies real needs and is conducted in such a way as to secure the people's earnest co-operation. On this subject Dr. Leipziger says:

"Participation by the people in the work of the public lectures is desired, for thought and reading must be encouraged. It is not only our duty to provide instruction in art, literature and science alone, but it is in a larger sense our province to train the people in the knowledge of the very problems which they as voters are called upon to decide. It is our test that eventually, through the medium of the public lectures, each schoolhouse and lecture hall shall become a genuine people's forum."

NATIONAL SOURCES

The organizations listed on the following pages either have lecturers on their staffs or are in touch with persons whose interest in their work impels them to give it the support of an occasional public address. The name appended in each case is that of the officer to whom correspondence should be directed.

The subjects set forth under each entry have in many instances been selected from a much longer list, and are thus to be regarded as indicative of the character and extent of the matters treated, rather than comprehensive.

Usually only the address of the headquarters has been given, but many of the societies have branches in various states and a membership distributed throughout the country. In considering the expense of travel, therefore, it is not safe to gauge it by the distance of the city named. Correspondence may reveal the existence of a speaker connected with the organization who lives quite close to the place where the address is desired.

Besides the associations named here there are in many states various institutions and philanthropic and educational bodies (see reference to these on pages 3-4) with which speakers are connected whose services are frequently available.

In allowing their names to be inserted in this directory the organizations wish it understood that they have placed themselves under no obligations. They have merely let it be announced that applications for lecture service may be made to them and they will co-operate whenever it is possible to do so.

In applying, full information should be given, as already suggested, concerning the size and character of the audience expected, hours and dates preferred, general topics and type of lecture (technical, popular, or illustrated) desired and the maximum expense which may be incurred.
