
Contributors

Kristi Andersen is associate professor of political science at the Maxwell School of Citizenship, Syracuse University. She is author of many papers on women in American politics and The Creation of a Democratic Majority, 1928–1936 (1979).

Alida Brill, formerly the Program Officer at the Russell Sage Foundation, is the co-author of Dimensions of Tolerance (1983). Prior to moving to New York City, she was a researcher at the Survey Research Center, University of California-Berkeley. She is the co-convenor of the Women's Dialogue—US/USSR.

Nancy F. Cott is professor of history and American studies at Yale University. She is author of The Bonds of Womanhood: 'Woman's Sphere' in New England, 1780–1835 (1977) and The Grounding of Modern Feminism (1987).

Elizabeth Faue holds the Susan B. Anthony Post-Doctoral Fellowship in History and Women's Studies at the University of Rochester in 1988–1990. She is the author of a forthcoming book, Community of Suffering and Struggle: Gender, Labor and Relief in Minneapolis, 1915–1945 and currently is working on a study of gender and the political culture of labor in the United States.

M. Patricia Fernández-Kelly is a research scientist at the Johns Hopkins University Institute for Policy Studies and an associate professor of sociology at the same institution. She is the author of For We are Sold, I and My People: Women and Industry in Mexico's Frontier (1983) and of articles on immigration, international economic restructuring, and the employment of Hispanic women in garment and electronics industries in Southern California and Southern Florida. With June Nash she co-edited Women, Men, and the International Division of Labor (1983), and with filmmaker Lorraine Gray she co-produced The Global Assembly Line, an Emmy-winning documentary exploring the effects of economic internationalization.

Jo Freeman has a Ph.D. in Political Science from the University of Chicago and a J. D. from the New York University School of Law. She is the author of The Politics of Women's Liberation (1975), which won a prize for the best scholarly work on women and politics of the American Political Science Association (1976). She is also editor of Women: A Feminist Perspective (most recent edition, 1989), and Social Movements of the Sixties and Seventies (1983).

Anna M. García is a research associate at the Center for U.S.-Mexican Studies at the University of California-San Diego. She has participated in numerous projects focusing on health, migration, the access to public services on the part of Mexican immigrants, and Hispanic women's employment. With M. Patricia Fernández-Kelly, she is the co-author of "Informalization at the Core: Hispanic Women, Homework, and the Advanced Capitalist State," in The Informal Economy: Studies in Advanced and Less Developed Countries (1989).

Patricia Gurin is professor of psychology and women's studies and a faculty associate of the Institute for Social Research at the University of Michigan. She is co-author of Black Consciousness, Identity, and Achievement (1975); Hope and Independence: Blacks' Reactions to Electoral and Party Politics (1989); Gender and Racial Socialization in the Classroom (1982), and co-editor of Race and the Social Sciences (1969). She organized the project on which Women, Politics, and Change is based while she was a Resident Scholar at the Russell Sage Foundation.

Nancy A. Hewitt is associate professor of history at the University of South Florida. Her publications include Women's Activism and Social Change: Rochester, New York, 1822-1872 (1984), "Feminist Friends: Agrarian Quakers and the Emergence of Women's Rights" (1986), and "Beyond the Search for Sisterhood: American Women's History in the 1980's" (1985). She is currently working on a comparative study of Anglo, black and Latin women in Tampa, Florida, 1885–1945, and is the American editor for Gender & History.

Evelyn Brooks Higginbotham is assistant professor of American history at the University of Pennsylvania. She is author of Righteous Discontent: The Women's Movement in the Black Baptist Church, 1880–1925 (forthcoming) and is currently writing a book on black women and politics in the twentieth century.

Leonie Huddy is assistant professor of political science at the State University of New York at Stony Brook. Her main research interests are in political psychology, particularly the politics of intergroup relations. She is the author and co-author of various articles, book chapters, and manuscripts on women and politics, bilingual education, and the politics of aging.

Herbert Jacob is professor of political science at Northwestern University. He has written extensively on law and politics in the United States. His most recent book is Silent Revolution: The Transformation of Divorce Law in the United States (1988). He is currently investigating the ways in which men and women use their understandings of the law to negotiate child support and custody settlements.

Jacqueline Jones is professor of history at Wellesley College. Her book, Labor of Love, Labor of Sorrow: Black Women, Work and the Family from Slavery to the Present (1985), won the Bancroft Prize. She is currently working on a study of the Southern origins of the Northern underclass.

M. Kent Jennings is currently professor of political science and a program director at the Center for Political Studies, University of Michigan, and professor of political science at the University of California-Santa Barbara. He is the author or co-author of Community Influentials (1964), The Political Character of Adolescents (1974), Governing American Schools, (1974), Generations and Politics (1981), and Parties in Transition (1986).

Rebecca Klatch received her Ph.D. from Harvard University in 1984. She is currently assistant professor of sociology at University of California-Santa Cruz. In 1989–1990, she is a fellow at the Stanford Humanities Center. She is currently researching the 1960s generation by comparing women and men active in Students for a Democratic Society and Young Americans for Freedom.

David Knoke is professor and chair, department of sociology, University of Minnesota. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Michigan in 1972 and specializes in the study of organizations and political sociology. Recent books include The Organizational State (with Edward O. Laumann) (1987), Organized for Action: Commitment in Voluntary Associations (1981), and Structural Politics: The Network Perspective. In 1989 he was a Fulbright Senior Research Scholar in West Germany, working with Franz Urban Pappi on a comparative study of American and German national labor policy domains.

Suzanne Lebsock received her doctorate in history from the University of Virginia in 1977. She is author of The Free Women of Petersburg: Status and Culture in a Southern Town, 1784-1860 (1984), which won the Bancroft Prize and the Berkshire Conference prize in 1985, and of Virginia Women, 1600-1945: 'A Share of Honour.' (1984) She is professor of history, Rutgers University.

William Lehrman, assistant professor at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, is writing a book on the social history of the life insurance industry.

Jane Mansbridge is professor in political science and sociology and a member of the research faculty of the Center for Urban affairs and Policy Research at Northwestern University. She is the author of Why We Lost the ERA (1986), the co-winner of the American Political Science Association's Kammerer award in 1987 and Schuck award in 1988, and Beyond Adversary Democracy (1980) and editor of Beyond Self-Interest (1990). She has held fellowships from the Woodrow Wilson Foundation, the National Science Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation, and the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton.

Ruth Milkman is associate professor of sociology at University of California-Los Angeles. She has written many scholarly articles on women's work, is the editor of Women, Work and Protest: A Century of Women's Labor History (1985) and author of Gender at Work: The Dynamics of Job Segregation By Sex During World War II (1987), which was awarded the Joan Kelly Prize in Women's History by the American Historical Association. Her current research interests include, in addition to women's labor history, changing industrial relations and new technology in the U.S. auto industry.

Barbara J. Nelson, a political scientist, is professor of public affairs and planning and co-director of the Center on Women and Public Policy at the Humphrey Institute, University of Minnesota. She is the author of Making an Issue of Child Abuse: Political Agenda Setting for Social Problems (1984), American Women in Politics: A Selected Bibliography and Resource Guide (1984), and co-author with Sara M. Evans of Wage Justice: Comparable Worth and the Paradox of Technocratic Reform (1989).

David O. Sears is professor of psychology and political science and Dean of Social Sciences at the University of California-Los Angeles. He received his B.A. in history from Stanford University, and his Ph.D. in psychology from Yale University in 1962, and has taught at UCLA since then. His books include Public Opinion (with Robert E. Lane) (1964), The Politics of Violence: The New Urban Blacks and the Watts Riot (with John B. McConahay) (1973), Tax Revolt: Something for Nothing in California (with Jack Citrin) (1982), and Political Cognition: The 19th Annual Carnegie Symposium on Cognition (edited with Richard R. Lau) (1986). He has published articles and book chapters on a wide variety of topics in social and political psychology, including attitude change, mass communications, ghetto riots, political socialization, voting behavior, and racism.

Kay Lehman Schlozman is professor of political science at Boston College where she teaches, among other topics in American politics, a course on Women and Politics. She is co-author of Injury to Insult: Unemployment, Class, and Political Response (with Sidney Verba) (1979) and Organized Interests and American Democracy (with John Tierney) (1985) and editor of Elections in America (1987). Her current research focuses upon voluntary participation in political and community life in America.

Louise A. Tilly is professor of history and sociology at the New School for Social Research and chair of its Committee on Historical Studies. She is author, with Joan Scott, of Women, Work and Family (1978, revised edition 1987), Politics and Class in Milan, 1880-1902 (forthcoming) and co-authored (with Heidi Hartmann and Robert Kraut) the report of the Panel on Technology and Women's Employment of the National Research Council (1986). She is currently working on a study of contrasting groups of women workers in turn-of-the-century France.

Sidney Verba is the Carl H. Pforzheimer University Professor at Harvard University. He has written extensively on citizen participation in the United States and elsewhere. He is the author or co-author of a number of books in the field, including The Civic Culture (1963), Participation in America (1972), Participation and Political Equality (1978), Injury to Insult (1979), and Equality in America (1985).

Susan Ware teaches in the history department at New York University, where she also coordinates the Women's History program. She is the author of several books on women in public life, including Beyond Suffrage: Women in the New Deal (1981) and Partner and I: Molly Dewson, Feminism, and New Deal Politics (1987). She is currently writing a book about popular heroines of the 1930s, which focuses on Amelia Earhart.

Robert Wuthnow is professor of sociology at Princeton University. His recent books include Communities of Discourse: Ideology and Social Structure in the Reformation (1989) and The Restructuring of American Religion: Society and Faith Since World War II (1988).