As one step in improving communication between social scientists and journalists, Russell Sage Foundation and the Graduate School of Journalism of Columbia University assembled equal numbers of both groups at Arden House in April of 1966. For two days they listened to each other, discussed, and bantered. At the end of that time, the lines of communication seemed more open than before.

This book presents the papers that were discussed at the Arden House Conference. They bring out some of the barriers to communication and point to possible ways of breaking these barriers. There is the frequent turgidity of social scientific language; there is the tendency of the journalist to preserve the sensation of the moment at the expense of basic issues; there is the stubborn difficulty of the issues themselves.

About the Editor
Frederick T. C. Yu is Professor and Director of Research at the Graduate School of Journalism of Columbia University. He holds a Ph.D. in Mass Communications from the University of Iowa and has previously done post-doctoral studies in social relations at Harvard University and Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He served on the staff of several newspapers including the WASHINGTON POST. He is author of Mass Communications in Communist China and many articles in professional journals.

Russell Sage Foundation will send on request an annual report describing its activities or a catalogue of its publications.

Russell Sage Foundation
230 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017